LanzaTech increases the safety and security of visitors through a win

17 July, 2013 - LanzaTech, a growing technology company in the industrial bio-commodities arena, has won 12 month's free access to the WhosOnLocation visitor management solution.

The need to increase the safety and security of visitors to LanzaTech offices occurred when the organization expanded to two sites within walking distance. Each site had strict health and safety policies which had to be met, –and office manager Kimberly Christie had been reviewing options for streamlining the visitor process after the expansion.

Ms. Christie explained that when she heard of a competition to win 12 month's free access to a visitor and contractor management solution she had to enter.

"At LanzaTech, the safety of our people and our visitors is at the heart of everything we do. LanzaTech has hundreds of visitors every year and the expansion to two sites had created an extra challenge. It was great timing for us as we really want to enhance our existing policies. Being responsible for the visitor sign in process and access cards it will give me peace of mind that whether I am on site or not the system can ensure all policies are being complied with, and senior staff can step in and know who is on site, visitors, staff or contractors and where they should be."

Having looked into solutions prior to the competition Ms. Christie was aware of WhosOnLocation and it was a strong contender for the final choice of solution.

The recent competition run by one of WhosOnLocation's resellers Pete Morrissey gave LanzaTech the solution they needed free of charge for 12 months.

"I began the competition after hearing about the high costs people were encountering with visitor books," said Mr. Morrissey.

"When one customer explained they spent in excess of $20,000 I began the competition as a way to show people that such a solution is not only more accurate and secure but cost-effective. I think it is great that the winner is a customer who can truly utilise its health and safety and security compliance features."
